

G'schafft

Gemeinschaft schafft - community creates

An office building from the 1980's is torn down in the outskirts of Vienna. Materials as well as components of it are reused on a building site right next to.

North to the space of intervention there is a strip of green wilderness which shall be emphasized by letting it grow into the area of the settlement.

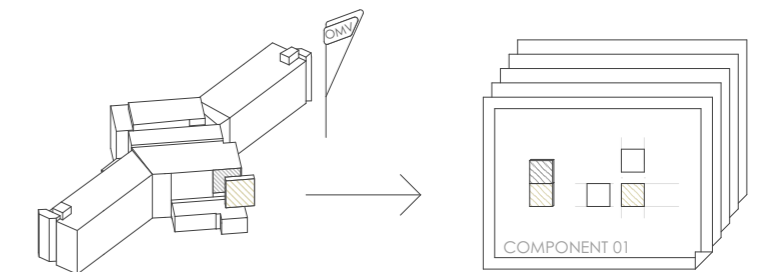

To provide the opportunity of an ongoing development of the built architecture, yet guaranteeing qualities, the project proposes a construction defining structure, a grid followed by a system of building rules.

As the users are regarded as active players, they are invited to participate in the process by building themselves with the help of a catalogue of components which incorporate materials of the demolished office building.

In the following scenario workshops are created - places to exchange, learn, work.

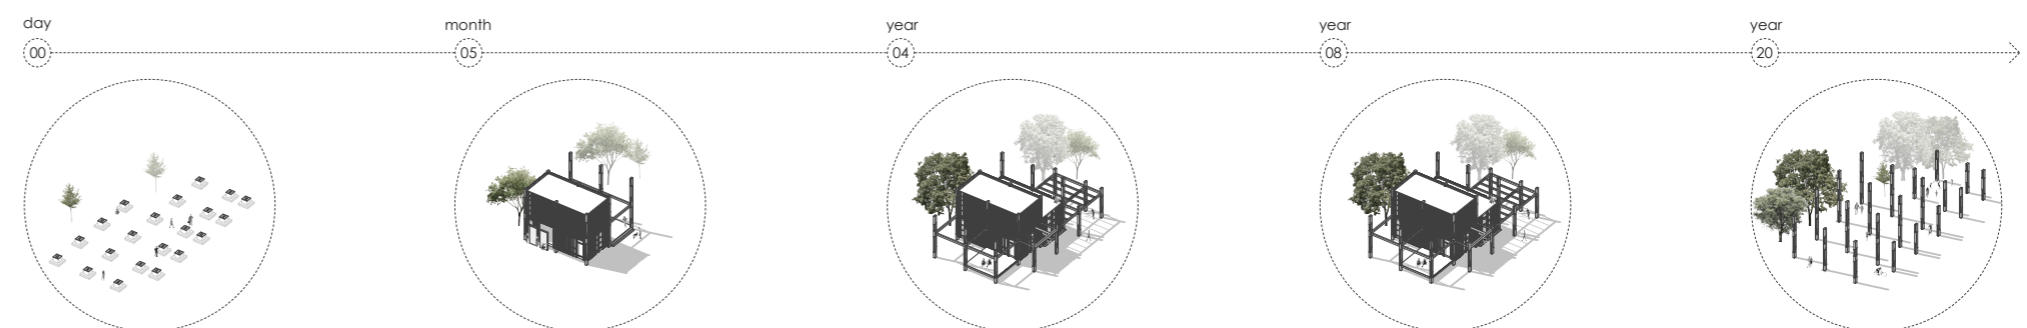

[1] connection of wilderness and residential area

[2] component catalogue - modular self-construction

[3] system of rules: grid - zoning plan

Timeline - developing space of workshops